NO 101 (National Emergency Law) is a leading example of emergency law in India, which was enacted in 1975 during the Emergency. It was a controversial law that granted the government extensive powers, including the suspension of civil liberties. The law was enacted in response to the political and social instability in India at that time. The law provided for the suspension of fundamental rights, the power to suspend the writs of habeas corpus, and the power to suspend the operation of certain provisions of the Constitution. The law was enacted in 1975 and was in effect until 1977. The law was a controversial law that granted the government extensive powers, including the suspension of civil liberties.
